Recent child maltreatment related literature related to ACEs screening in primary care:

Gillespie, R. J. (2019). Screening for adverse childhood experiences in pediatric primary care: pitfalls and possibilities. Pediatric Annals, 48(7):e257-e261. PMID: 31305942

- This article reviews the current state of screening for ACEs and toxic stress in practice, describes how pediatricians and clinics have overcome pitfalls during implementation of practice-based screening initiatives, and discusses possibilities for the future of primary care-based screening.

Marie-Mitchell A., Lee J, Siplon C., Chan F., Riesen, S., Vercio, C. (2019). Implementation of the whole child assessment to screen for adverse childhood experiences. Global Pediatric Health, 6:2333794X19862093. PMID: 31309131

- Development of the Whole Child Assessment for pediatric primary care, which combines ACEs screening with state-required Medicaid questions such as dental health and nutrition. The screen was developed with extensive input from family members and physicians. With a streamlined work process, visits were actually shorter.
